Whole lotta shakin' goin' on here, as Jerry Lee might say. There are two somewhat related events to report on the FMU front. WFMU has become independent of Upsala College, having been purchased by a not-for-profit group working in the interest of the station. This announcement comes on the heels of the near closing of Upsala College in the past few months.

We had begun the process of becoming independent of the college several months ago, and with the possible closing of the college, it became even more imperative for us to control our own fate. Being independent should open up many new vistas and make it easier to implement several exciting and far-reaching plans for the future. However, our new independent status will result in the station taking on new day-to-day expenses such as paying rent, insurance, etc.

The possibility of the college closing shouldn't affect the station very much, though it may mean scouting for a new location in the not-too-distant future. It's important to stress that it definitely will not have any effect on WFMU's programming.

In other news, sometime in September I will be handing over the reins of this big bucking bronco called the Music Department to the capable, sturdy and unwavering hands of Robin Edgerton. Our in-house staff of biographers and private detectives are still delvng deep into her background, so I will give you a proper introduction to her in the next playlist (my last, sob, sniff). Until then...

Yours till the U.S. Drinks Canada Dry,
